Differences Between TV and Radio/Podcast Journalism. Sequencing formats and the stacking of a show on television also differs from radio and podcast news. For instance, a viral video may become the opening story on television, but without the power of visuals, radio and podcasts must prioritize the most attention-grabbing stories using only words, resulting in the viral video story being pushed further back in the show once the listener's already invested. Additionally, weather forecasts and traffic conditions are usually later in the program on television " unless extreme weather conditions or massive traffic jams are the top stories of the day
