This course is a critical introduction to American political institutions and behavior. Structurally the American system finds form in the Madisonian Model, the method of government established by the Framers and based on separation of powers, checks and balances, and overlapping centers of political power. Our system seeks to balance elite and mass interests, participation, and control. Tension and contradiction have been threaded throughout the American system since its inception: the tension between liberty and equality, the contradiction between our political ideals and our institutions, and the ambiguity in the very concept of democracy itself. Over the semester we will test the continued viability of the Madisonian Model as we consider our institutional framework, the values it embodies, and its performance. In our class attention is given to: constitutional theory and principles, the constitutional system, political culture, political institutions (the presidency, congress, the judiciary, the bureaucracy), public policy (civil rights and civil liberties, social welfare policy, economic policy, employment policy) consent and political participation (public opinion, mass media, elections and voting, parties, groups and interests) and political corruption.

REQUIREMENTS

1. Attend class regularly and participate. Your professor is a fanatic about attendance. The record bears this out. You are expected to attend all lectures and discussion sections. Your attendance and participation will be considered in your final grade for the course. An attendance sheet circulates in this class; responsibility for signing it is yours. It is expected that you will complete assigned readings before class and section meetings so that your contributions will be informed and relevant.

Students must register for and attend a discussion section. You cannot take this course unless you are registered in a section.

2. Complete two examinations. A midterm examination will be given in class on March 7th. There is no alternative date for the midterm. A final examination will be given during exam week. The official final exam date is available after Midterm; as of now the tentative date scheduled for this class's final exam is May 7th. Do not make travel arrangements that conflict with the final exam date; there are no alternative final exam options for this class.

3. Complete the research paper. An 8-10 page analytical research paper is required. You are to hand in a hard copy of your paper to your TA in class April 25th; do not email your papers, or proposals, to your TAs or to Professor Russell. Topics will be discussed in class and discussion sections and should reflect the content of the course as well as an interest of yours. I expect you to identify a paper topic and submit a preliminary thesis statement and bibliography by March 19 in a two-page overview of your paper containing a clear thesis statement and your argument in brief. You must consult at least once with me and/or your TA about your research interests and intentions, and you are encouraged to meet with us more frequently as your research and writing is in process. Your bibliography should be drawn primarily from scholarly books, journals, articles and chapters, not journalistic or non academic online resources. Late papers will receive a grade penalty of 5 points a day.

GRADING Your course grade is determined as follows: 30% for the midterm exam, 30% for the final exam, and 30 % for the paper. Your participation in discussion sessions and class will affect your grade; they account for 10% of it.
