Amyloidosis is the non-infectious disease of primary importance in the aging Syrian hamster (Franks and Chesterman, 1957). The incidence of amyloidosis varies by hamster colony (Pour et al., 1976a, 1979), and there is a higher incidence of amyloidosis in females compared to males (Coe and Ross, 1990; Tennent et al., 1993). Many infectious and even non-infectious diseases can mimic viral HF, especially in the early stages, resulting in an extremely broad differential diagnosis that varies by geographic region (Table 16.3 and Figures 16.1–16.4). Initial misdiagnosis of more familiar syndromes is common. CMCD without any other severe infection or non-infectious disease manifestation such as autoimmunity represents a distinct clinical entity.
