Robert's great-grandfather, William Chambers (birth unknown), a lieutenant in the British Royal Navy, was married to Amelia Saunders, (1765-1822), the great grand daughter of Tobias Saunders, of Westerly, Rhode Island. The couple moved from Westerly, to Greenfield, Massachusetts and then to Galway, New York, where their son, also William Chambers, (1798-1874) was born. His brother was architect Walter Boughton Chambers. Robert was first educated at the Brooklyn Polytechnic Institute, and then entered the Art Students' League at around the age of twenty, where the artist Charles Dana Gibson was his fellow student. On his return to New York, he succeeded in selling his illustrations to Life, Truth, and Vogue magazines. In a comet of a letter from the early spring of 1852, eight months into Susan's absence, Emily hurls a grenade of conflicted self-revelation: Will you be kind to me, Susie? She ends her letter with aching awareness of the dissonance between her private desire and the public norms of love: Now, farewell, Susie . . . Perhaps the ten-month absence, filled not with their customary walks in the woods but with letters of exponentially swelling intensity, had revealed to Susan that Emily's feelings for her were not of a different hue but of a wholly different color one that she was constitutionally unable to match. Or perhaps Emily had always misdivined the contents of Susan's heart, inferring an illusory symmetry of feeling on the basis not of evidence but of willfully blind hope.
