Learning and instruction: Theory into practice (4th ed.). Upper Saddle River, NJ: Prentice-Hall. Plagiarized Version Correct Version

Theories and philosophies are different from each other because theories seek to explain real-world events and can be certified through scientific investigation. Learning theories address the underlying psychological dynamics of events, so they provide a mechanism for understanding the implications of events related to learning in both formal and informal settings. Theories and philosophies are different from each other because, according to Gredler (2001) theori... Free 2-day shipping.
