The Land of Cockaigne depicted by Breughel the Elder, a workers' paradise where the peasants eat their fill and the rich labourMunich, Alte Pinakothek. Near my childhood home in Argyll lies the skeleton of a currach, an ancient type of Irish boat made by stretching animal hides over a wood frame. The boat was made in the 1970s, one of several built for the Brendan Voyage, Tim Severin's successful attempt to replicate the transatlantic voyage made by Saint Brendan in the 6th century. My neighbour took part in that voyage, and kept one of the prototype boats. The voyage of Saint Brendan was an Eco notes that the book "influenced German occultist circles and inspired, a decade before the advent of Nazism, the Vril Society" Believers waited for the Coming Race of extraordinary power and beauty." Perhaps because a certain beefy beverage has not taken root in Italy, Eco does not mention a more benign association. Later portrayals of legendary lands concentrated on the sexual possibilities of these blissful abodes. An anonymous 15th-century vision of "il giardino dell'amore" charmingly portrays naked hanky-panky in a fountain. A fleshy rendering by the 19th-century academician Bouguereau of Nymphs with Satyr centres on the unambiguous fondling of the latter's horn.
