The Normandy landings were the landing operations on Tuesday, 6 June 1944 of the Allied invasion of Normandy in Operation Overlord during World War II. Codenamed Operation Neptune and often referred to as D-Day, it was the largest seaborne invasion in history. The operation began the liberation of German-occupied France (and later western Europe) and laid the foundations of the Allied victory on the Western Front. The D-Day landing of June 6, 1944, ranks as the boldest and most successful large-scale invasion in military history and the most memorable WW2 moment. The manpower required to meet the needs was enormous. Less than one-fourth of the Allied troops in France were in combat units, and only about 20 percent served as infantrymen. A four- or five-to-one tail to tooth ratio was not unusual in other theaters of war, either. In mechanized warfare, fuel and oil were essential to success, and Allied logisticians solved the problem of adequate petroleum supply. They designed and built the Pipeline under the Ocean (PLUTO) to pump the lifeblood of tanks, trucks, and all other motor vehicles directly to Normandy. The landing by Allied troops on the beaches of Normandy could have been 'the most ghastly disaster of the whole war'. D-Day. Airborne troops hindered German reinforcements. In the early hours of 6 June RAF bombers dropped aluminium foil of the Pas de Calais to simulate the radar profile of a great invasion fleet. Meanwhile more than 7,000 vessels, the largest naval task force ever assembled, moved to the Normandy coast. Shortly after midnight the British 6th and American 101st and 82nd Airborne divisions began landing.
