Mapping Human History: Discovering the Past Through Our Genes was selected as a finalist for the nonfiction National Book Award and is now being made available in trade paperback. 8 Praise for Steve Olson's Mapping Human History "Steve Olson masterfully describes one of the most profound insights to be gleaned from the Human Genome Project: the remarkable unity of the human species at the genetic level. The book's central message concerns genetics and race: the classification of humans into racial categories ignores the biological reality of the overwhelming genetic similarity of outwardly different-seeming individuals [The] author's lucid explication of this theme is noteworthy and valuable, particularly for a general audience. Mapping Human History: Genes, Race, and Our Common Origins. Steve Olson. Mariner Books, 2003. Human Population Genetic Structure and Inference of Group Membership. Michael J. Bamshad et al. in American Journal of Human Genetics, Vol. 72, No. 3, pages 578-589; March 2003. Race and Genomics. Gene flow stops "sub-species" formation. So, unless civilization collapses and human populations are geographically isolated, there will be no "sub-species" or allopatric speciation. Even if that situation were to arise, the resulting new populations would NOT correspond to the traditional 3 "races". That use of the term "race" is dead from an evolutionary standpoint.

A human race is defined as a group of people with certain common inherited features that distinguish them from other groups of people. All men of whatever race are currently classified by the anthropologist or biologist as belonging to the one species, Homo sapiens. This is another way of saying that the differences between human races are not great, even though they may appear so, i.e. black vs white skin. All races of mankind in the world can interbreed because they have so much in common. Most anthropologists recognize 3 or 4 basic races of man in existence today. These races can be further The History and Geography of Human Genes. Princeton, N.J.: Princeton University Press. ISBN 978-0-691-08750-4. Mapping Human History : Genes, Race, and Our Common Origins.
