Washington (AFP) - Illegal immigration across the US-Mexico border has plunged in the past two months as President Donald Trump's crackdown takes hold, Homeland Security Secretary John Kelly said Wednesday. Apprehensions of people trying to sneak into the United States, seen as an indicator of the total flow of undocumented immigrants, dropped to 16,600 in March, down 30 percent from February and 64 percent from a year ago. Instead, the additions to border control could involve a combination of physical barriers, electronic monitoring and more patrols. "It is unlikely that we will build a wall, a physical barrier, from sea to shining sea." "All we know is that physical barriers do work if they are put in the right places." Illegal immigration is a global issue. It not only affects the US, but many countries with better infrastructure, public facilities, and employment opportunities than the home country of the immigrants.
