All right, here you are at last, camera in hand, beneath the English sky (which honestly isn't gray and wet all the time), and you are surrounded by all sorts of ancient things. There are earthworks of different sorts, stones large and small, tombs of varying shapes and sizes, and so on. How on earth do you sort it all out and know what you're looking at? Don't worry, it isn't as confusing as it looks.Â They are defensive structures enclosing high places with rings of ditches and banks. Often there were wooden or stone walls atop the banks as a further barrier. In some cases a series of concentric ditches and banks were built.
