Thoughtful clinicians are aware that diagnostic categories are simply concepts, justified only by whether or not they provide a useful framework for organizing and explaining the complexity of clinical experience in order to derive predictions about outcome and to guide decisions about treatment.Â DSM-IV explicitly rejects (presumably to avoid the implication of labeling) the ``misconception that a classification of mental disorders classifies people" and states that ``actually what are being classi-fied are disorders that people have" [4]. The term ``disorder", first intro-duced as a generic name for the unit of.
